The Benefits of Being Program Chairman

For a number of years now, I've been involved with programs as Program Chairman or co-Program Chairman for the VAC. This position has brought many interesting speakers to the club and even more interesting opportunities into my life. One of the greatest benefits has been meeting wonderful anglers, biologists, fishing tackle reps and others, many of whom have become fishing friends. This has led to some incredible fishing opportunities including musky, trophy trout, tarpon, trophy flounder, red drum (from the surf) and even some beautiful grouper (the names escape me).

This is an incredible chance to expand your fishing base locally, regionally and even nationally.

Another benefit to being Program Chairman is getting to know Virginia Anglers Club members better. We have a number of members who are wonderful speakers, great story tellers and incredible anglers. Additionally, members come to you (not often, but they do!!) about a program idea. Our March program this year, with George Daniel, who also offered a fly tying demo was completely arranged and managed by Eric Webster. Last year's kickoff program with bass fishing legend, Woo Daves, was fully arranged by member Stuart Lee.

Additionally, we have many interested and gracious members who often help with the hosting duty, generally taking the speaker out for dinner before the meeting. Over the past several years, Art Conway has been more than generous with his time before the meetings, quite often hosting our speakers.

The 2019 slate of speakers and programs is set, and I'm now working towards the 2020 program list. If you are interested in becoming the 2020 Program Chairman, please call or email and let's talk. I am happy to work with the new Program Chairman and get things rolling and set up for 2020.

When it comes down to it, with anything, you get back what you put into something. Want to catch a musky or a tarpon? Become the Program Chairman and get those speakers in.

In closing, with almost 20 years as a member, I would love to see a handful of newer members (or older members) who are not involved with the leadership team, get involved. Step into it gently with assistance from current committee members, or jump in and take over a position.

Thanks and Happy Fishing!

“Wild Chesapeake: Top Honors for Va. Reel-Maker”

(The following items have been copied from the Chesapeake Bay Magazine’s Electronic newsletter, Bay Bulletin, July 2019 issue)

Wes Seigler was a hard man to get to the day after the New Product Showcase winners were announced at the International Convention of Allied Sportfishing Trades (ICAST), the world’s largest sport fishing trade show held last week in Orlando. And understandably so, for the second year running, a Seigler reel was named best in show in the fly reel category.

Seigler, the founder of Seigler Reels based in Virginia Beach, was good enough to carve out a few minutes to chat with CBM’s Bay Bulletin. Beaming with enthusiasm, he attributed the wins to his great team and loyal customers. Later, Seigler’s post on his Instagram account (@fishseigler) reinforced this: “We can’t believe we did it again! I want to thank everyone that has believed in us and our products.” He also shared with me that when the big moment came, he and his crew were back at their hotel. So, Annapolis-based AllTackle owner Keith Frasier helped out and accepted the trophy.

For nearly a decade, Seigler and his team have sweated the details to design and build innovative and very reliable conventional and fly reels. (See Made on the Bay: Reinventing the Reel, CBM April 2018) One of the keys, according to their website, is “eliminating unnecessary pieces that are often the cause of performance issues and failure and overbuilding every component to make a reel that is always up for any fight you choose to pick with it.” All Seigler reels are made in the U.S. using components also made in the U.S. Seigler and his team are customer-driven, taking suggestions on design from anglers and guides. They purposefully make a reel that’s easy to service and maintain, either back at the factory or by the customer. In fact, they encourage anglers to do just that.

Now it in its 60th year, ICAST is produced by the American Sportfishing Association (ASA). It’s the Super Bowl of the sport fishing industry with representatives from all over the recreational fishing world. I talked with folks from China, Australia, and the Netherlands who came to check out the hottest new tackle, rods and reels, gear, accessories, and apparel. ICAST sets the tone for the upcoming year in fishing product sales, a substantial economic driver. According to the ASA’s most recent survey, recreational saltwater angling generates $18.3 billion nationwide.

In the New Product Showcase, more than one thousand products were entered by 303 companies in 29 categories.

Seigler’s #madeonthebay ICAST achievement is impressive, and it couldn’t have happened to a better bunch of people.

PROGRAMS AND EXPEDITIONS SCHEDULE FOR 2019

PROGRAMS AND SPEAKERS

July: No meeting

August 27: DGIF Biologist will speak on the current state of smallmouth bass in the James. Information on other rivers may also be available such as the New and Shenandoah River. More details to follow.

September 24: Former Virginia Anglers Club member, and master story teller, Lee Huss will give a “virtual” program on fishing the Nottoway River. For members with smart phones download “Google Expeditions” before the meeting. Lee will have 30 pairs of “virtual reality headsets” to share with everyone. This is an added new twist to the presentation. There will also be a normal two-dimensional program running as well for those without a smart phone/cell phone. The program will also be running on a TV or overhead projector.

October 22: Glenn Carter and Stuart Lee – Achieving VAC Master Angler Status
Long-time members present stories and how to’s on earning Master Angler

November: No meeting

December: No meeting

From the Editor: Rockfish Trouble

(The following items have been copied from the Chesapeake Bay Magazine's Electronic newsletter, Bay Bulletin, June 2019 issue)

By Joe Evans

Those of us who fished in the late 1970s and '80s, when the striped bass population collapsed due to overfishing and pollution, are getting a sense of déjà vu as we head into the 2019 season. We recall that the decline was so severe that the 1979 Congress enacted the Emergency Striped Bass Act to force and fund efforts to assess the situation and develop restoration strategies. Five years later, Maryland Governor Harry Hughes declared a moratorium on commercial and recreational striped bass harvests. Eventually, the other striped-bass states followed suit. It took ten years of research, restraint, money, restoration, and angst before the scientists could say the fishery was recovered. It was painful and embarrassing that we didn't have the institutional courage and sense to act earlier. Maybe it could have been avoided. But that's not how our unique Jeffersonian democracy works, really. Those who show up at public and private meetings and shout the loudest often get their way, while those who stay home forfeit their position on the matter. Thus, those who might suffer short-term losses in the bargain win a battle, while the Bay and its denizens get lost in the shuffle. The conservation can get kicked down the road.

In 1996, the Maryland Striped Bass Young-of-the-Year Survey hit its highest point since the beginning of the study in the 1950s. The count has tumbled in fits and starts down to disturbing lows in 2006, 2008, 2012 and 2016. Between 2014 and 2017, the average annual recreational haul dropped from 25 million to 16 million pounds. Some of that is a result of modest tightening of the regulations. Note: 2015 brought an encouraging spike in the young-of-the-year number, which shores up an argument for not panicking...yet.

Signs of trouble appeared to some of us in 2013 when every angler headed to the mouth of Eastern Bay to enjoy "great fishing" where the robust 2011 class of juvenile stripers was trapped by the summer dead-zone of oxygen-depleted main-stem Chesapeake waters. The fish got hammered. I was there with everybody else, catching and releasing, and doing what I thought was the right thing. It might have been the wrong thing.

Anglers release more than 90 percent of the fish they catch due to size and creel limits and, for a fringe of thoughtful anglers, conservation concerns—roughly 12 million fish in 2017. Fisheries analysts use a nine-percent mortality rate for released fish, which in 2017 amounted to 48 percent of the total number of dead stripers, including all recreational and commercial harvests and releases. The nine-percent estimate is an average of survey results in various conditions and fish-handling techniques. What seems lost in the discussion is that, in the heat of summer, water and air temperature differentials produce very high release mortality rates. It's probable that many if not most of the fish we photographed, revived and released to swim away in Eastern Bay that summer didn't survive.

Results of a new striped bass population assessment released in February indicate that the fishery is shaky. The female spawning stock is below the safety threshold and it is "overfished." Virginia, almost immediately, took a slightly symbolic action to curtail the damage by cancelling its modest spring trophy season. Maryland's comparatively huge trophy season, which targets stripers going to and from their natal spawning rivers, kicked off as usual with no indication that the state will do anything this year. Eventually, the other states at the Atlantic States Marine Fishery Commission table may force the issue as corrective action becomes a reality.

The process for sorting this out in favor of the resource will be complicated and fraught with pressure from those with immediate stakes in the fishery.

The blame-game is heating up, as usual. There's plenty to go around, and none of it is helpful.

All we can do is stay informed, get involved, and consider the future before spouting opinions. Chesapeake Bay Magazine and the Bay Bulletin will continue to follow the issues.

Changes are coming.
